

More than Half of Chinese Don't Want Swine Flu Shot: Poll

BEIJING, Oct 26: More than half of all Chinese do not plan to be vaccinated against swine flu because they are unsure about the safety of the shot, according to a survey by state media published Monday. The poll by the China Daily and popular web portal sohu.com said more than 54 percent of the 2,000 respondents said they did not want the A(H1N1) vaccine -- a huge turnaround from two months ago, when 76 percent said they did.

"The vaccine has been developed and administered so quickly that I couldn't help questioning its quality and reliability," the paper quoted 36-year-old Zhang Lin, who refused the shot for her eight-year-old son, as saying.

China, which has the world's largest population at 1.3 billion people, has launched a mass swine flu vaccination campaign in a bid to stave off large outbreaks, especially as winter -- and the regular flu season -- sets in here. But only 30 percent of those polled by the China Daily said they definitely would like to receive the shot. About 15 percent said they would make a decision based on what other people did.

The government has said it plans to inoculate five percent of the population, or 65 million people, against swine flu by year's end. So far, 300,000 people have received the vaccination. More than 33,000 cases of A(H1N1) influenza had been reported as of Friday, according to health ministry figures, with the number of infections accelerating in recent weeks. Two deaths have so far been confirmed. Health authorities have repeatedly warned they are facing a "grim" task of preventing outbreaks and keeping the death toll low.

"Tens of millions could be infected," the China Daily quoted Zeng Guang, chief epidemiologist at the Chinese Centre for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC)...

Fifth "swine flu" Vaccine Death in Sweden

Vaccinations Still Go Ahead as Planned!

by Johan Niklasson

27 October 2009: We have earlier reported on the first death, the second death, the third death and the fourth death in Sweden from the poisonous Pandemrix vaccine shot.

Media in Sweden is having a tough time maintaining the propaganda as more and more people question the reasons for the mass vaccination. Now, authorities say that if not "80% of the population takes the shot, we risk 100 deaths from the swine flu". Most Swedes know that a normal flu season see several thousand dead from complications from the seasonal flu so the proportions of the propaganda coming from media and the government has caused a growing revolt against the massive attempts to scare people to take the poisonous injection.

Today, Svenska Dagbladet reports that over 350 cases of side effects from the Pandemrix "swine flu" shot, has been recorded so far. It has also become clear that this shot contains the most deadly mix of substances of all the known vaccines manufactured against the so called "swine flu" H1N1 influenza. The official number of deaths from the "swine flu" vaccine is now five. And that is only those who have strong immediate reactions, the long term effects are usually never even investigated. If you would die from the shot two weeks after you took it, your death would not be considered to have anything to do with the vaccination. Severe health problems years after will of course be very hard to link to the poisonous injection. Even if these five official cases died within days, the official story is of course as expected: "none of these deaths has been confirmed to be linked to the vaccine."

In Aftonbladet, Jan Liliemark from The Swedish Institute for Infectious Disease Control (SMI) says: "Nothing points to a connection. There will be more deaths. We are looking for a pattern, if the cases have something in common. We have so far not found any clear connections between them yet."

Officially 198 cases of confirmed "swine flu" exist in Sweden today among a population of over 9 million. How these cases have been tested and determined is not clear.

As always with statistics like this, historically we know that very few of all real side effects are actually reported. Optimistically, up to ten per cent would be reported. It is also highly likely that deaths are being kept secret by the authorities so that the massive and hugely expensive vaccination program will not come to a complete stop. Too many have put their job, reputation and title at stake for the truth to be reported and published.

So far, three people have been reported dead from complications from getting the H1N1 virus. Five dead from the flu shot before the real vaccination campaign has even started should be an indication to question the vaccine and the strategy chosen but the authorities have so much prestige invested that it is unlikely it will ever happen - no matter how many will die from the poisonous injections.

The Swedish public are being kept in the dark about the most simple facts about the vaccinations. The questionable protection against the virus will only be for this present strain - any new mutations would immediately require a new vaccine for that strain. The new second wave of the new mutation is exactly what authorities warn about and use as an argument to take the poisonous injection.

Authorities are running out of arguments and completely idiotic arguments have been published the last week in Sweden.

1) "There is less mercury in the shot than you get from eating mercury contaminated fish...(?)"

2) "You might get sick from the vaccine but you should take that risk to 'save' someone, who could die from getting the H1N1 infection from you..."

3) "It would be like killing someone, not to take the shot, out of solidarity...(?)"

4) "Mercury is not dangerous and also squalene is not dangerous, there is nothing called the Gulf War Syndrome and if there is, it has nothing to do with squalene because there was no squalene in the vaccines the US troops got..."

5) "German politicians will not get a different flu shot than the rest of the German population..."

The number of flat out lies are so many, it is hard to keep track of them all.

The chief of The Swedish Institute for Infectious Disease Control (SMI), Annika Linde, says in the article, "The vaccine is principally natural to the body. The mercury was necessary but the amounts are very small. There are many who have been making statements without qualified knowledge. It is of course good that this type of matter is debated, but some of the reporting is rather devastating for the possibility to vaccinate the whole population."

You are welcome Mrs Linde.

The official line in Sweden is bordering to madness and the biggest medical scandal in the history of the nation has just started.

Norway Pushes Forward with "swine flu" Vaccination Programme in Spite of Deaths in Sweden

23 October 2009: In spite of the reports of two deaths from the "swine flu" jab emerging from Sweden, the Norwegian government today called on people to take the GlaxoSmithKline's Pandemrix shot. Only children under six and women in the first stages of pregnancy are to be advised against the shot, the Health Minister Anne-Grete Stroem-Erichsen said on Friday. Norway has bought 9.4 million doses of Pandemrix, enough to vaccinate the entire population.
